Introduction

The purpose of Introduction to Myers-Briggs® Type and Teams is to help you understand your results on the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator® (MBTI®) assessment and the relationship of those results to your work on a team. While the assessment has been used successfully with individuals, its power can be multiplied when applied to teams, as its use in team building worldwide attests.

This booklet presents a framework designed to help teams function more productively. The MBTI assessment is useful to teams because it is based on the idea that we all have unique gifts to offer and challenges to overcome. In teams we work together, attempting to maximize each member’s special talents, thereby minimizing gaps in knowledge and skills. Applying the information in this booklet to teams and team building will help teams succeed.

To demonstrate the wide-ranging benefits of the MBTI assessment, this booklet covers six core issues affecting teams today: communication, team culture, leadership, change, problem solving/conflict resolution, and stress. The type descriptions include sample responses of each of the 16 types to each of the core issues. Team members can use these examples to enhance their type awareness and thereby increase both individual and team effectiveness.

TEAMS AND TEAM BUILDING

A team is a group of two or more people working together to accomplish a task. This may seem obvious, yet many people when faced with the word team think only of sports. Just as each member of a sports team has a different role to play and skills to offer, so do members of work teams. The MBTI assessment provides a framework for understanding differences in what each team member brings to the team.

Team building—as conducted with the help of the MBTI assessment—is the process by which a group of individuals are encouraged to learn about themselves, each other, and their leader(s), and about how these components fit together to boost team success. Use this booklet to help initiate team building or to continue to reinforce a team-building effort that has already begun.

THE MBTI® ASSESSMENT AND ITS BENEFITS TO TEAMS

The MBTI assessment reflects individual preferences for directing and receiving energy (Extraversion or Introversion), taking in information (Sensing or Intuition), making decisions and coming to conclusions (Thinking or Feeling), and approaching the outside world (Judging or Perceiving). Sixteen unique personality types result from the combinations of these eight MBTI preferences. This booklet will help you understand your type and the relationship of your preferences to the way you and other team members interact. As you read the descriptions, remember that although your preferences may lead you to behave in certain predictable ways, organizational and personal goals may also induce you to act in ways that are different from your natural preferences.
